CONCORD — Future In Sight, formerly known as the New Hampshire Association for the Blind, has hired Lucinda Williams as its new director of development. Her mission will be to expand funding in support of the organization's programs and services. “As a survivor of a traumatic brain injury coupled with the awareness of a grandson with Type 1 diabetes, I bring a personal passion and dedication to the responsibilities as director of development for Future in Sight;” said Williams.

Williams joins Future In Sight with 25 years of non-profit management experience primarily in the arts and health and human services. She has served as the director of development for the Joshua M. Freeman Foundation and Service Dogs by Warren Retrievers; executive director of the Delaware Symphony Orchestra and the Brain Injury Association of Delaware; and as vice president of the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra for Artistic, Education and Community Outreach. She has operated her own independent arts production company, Serenade Productions, working alongside artists Yo Yo Ma, Tony Bennett, Alicia Keys, Stevie Wonder, the Pittsburgh Symphony, and more. In the course of her career, Lucinda has raised millions of dollars for the organizations for which she served.

“Lucinda’s experience and passion compliments our vision to strengthen and expand services, continue development of our practice, and support efforts to serve thousands more children and adults in New Hampshire. It’s an exciting time for our organization and the clients we serve,” said Future In Sight President and CEO David Morgan. “She joins the organization almost one year after the launch of our new brand. We have adapted to changing needs and demographics, offering programs for people living with a wide range of visual disabilities. I am confident that Lucinda will enable Future In Sight to achieve its immediate and long range goals.”
